When I ask the question: Are you a good man or a bad man? How can I tell if he is a good man by the way he answer my question? Why answering "I don't know" qualifies as a good man

That's an interesting question. Here's the thing about labeling someone "good" or "bad": it's not always a simple answer. People are complex, and their actions can be a mix of good and bad intentions or consequences.

Here's why answering "I don't know" might be a sign of a good quality:

- Self-awareness: It shows the person is willing to be honest about themselves, even if it means admitting they don't have a clear answer.
- Humility: It suggests they're not self-righteous and acknowledge there's always room for growth.
- Considers perspective: "I don't know" might mean they're considering your perspective on what makes a good person.

However, there are other reasons someone might answer "I don't know":

- Avoiding the question: They might not want to engage in a deep conversation.
- Uncertainty: They might genuinely be unsure how to define "good."

So, while "I don't know" can be a good sign, it's not the only indicator. Here are some better ways to get a feel for someone's character:

- Observe their actions: How do they treat others? Are they kind and respectful?

- Listen to their values: What do they talk about as important? Does it align with your own values?
- See how they handle situations: Do they act with integrity even when it's difficult?

Ultimately, judging someone as "good" or "bad" is a personal judgment. By looking at their actions, values, and how they handle situations, you'll get a better picture of who they are
