A forward-looking keyword is a term used to describe a word or phrase that indicates a focus on the future. These keywords are often used in business documents, financial statements, and market analysis to discuss projections, expectations, and goals. Examples of forward-looking keywords include:

- project
- target
- expect
- anticipate
- forecast

There isn't a direct opposite for "forward-looking" keywords, but you can use terms that focus on the present or past to achieve a similar effect. Here's how:

- Present-focused keywords: These describe the current state of affairs. Examples include:
 - is
 - are
 - currently
 - at present
 - now (to a lesser extent)
- Past-focused keywords: These refer to things that have already happened. Examples include:
 - was

- were
- historically
- previously

Now-looking isn't a commonly used term. "Present" or "current" are clearer alternatives for describing the current state.
